INGLISH AND CHINESE DICTIONARY. WITH THE PUNTI AND MANDARIN PRONUNCIATION. in Anglo-Chinese Dictionary, published at Daily Press Office, Hongkong

For comprehensiveness and practical service this Work stands unrivalled. All the new words which the Chinese have of late years been compelled to coin to express the numerous objects in machinery, photography, telegraphy, and in science generally, which the rapid advance of foreign relations has imposed upon them, are here given in extenso. Each and every word is fully illustrated and explained, forming exercises for students of a most instructive nature. Both the Court and Punti pronunciations are given the accounts being earefully marked on the best principle hitherto attained. The typography displays the success of an attempt to make the Chinese and English type correspond in the size of body, thereby offeeting a vast economy of space, achieving a clearness not previously attained, and dispensing with those vest margins vacant spaces which have heretofore characterized Chinese publications. To illustrate the vast scope of the work the following facts are submitted for consideration:-Chalmers' Vocabulary contains about 16,000 Chinese characters, and Medburst's English and Chinese Dictionary about 100,000, whilst this work contains more than 50,000 English words, and upwards of 600,000 Chinese characters. Again, despite all the grammars and other elementary works as yet published, the student of this difficult language absolutely requires examples to display the various applications and equivalents of different words which have one general meaning. Of these examples this work contains more than five times as many ar any other Dictionary hitherto pub-

For practical purposes the arrangement of the work is so complete, that a reference to its pages enables a person who understands English to communicate effectively with natives who hours:understand nothing but Chinese. In this respect the work will be found indispensable to all Europeans residing in China, and to the natives. the aselves it explains subjects fully with which ver few indeed of them are perfectly acquainted. To parties resident in England and interested in China it cannot but be invaluable occasion-

. it comprises upwards of two thousand large quarto pages.

AN UNEXPECTED MEETING. Marjorie sate at her breakfast. The gloom of the weather was reflected on her downcast face. The first few days at Eyon ourt had given her plenty to do; she explored the house, and as she became used to its rooms and passages, she learned to laugh at her fours when the old furniture creaked and the mice scuttled behind the the garden was bare of autumn flowers, it had late reverie, held out her hand with a delighted I will dwell apart and feel apart. Neither in love plainly known better days; and, here and there, smile. she found a tangled creeper in some neglected corner, or else a rosebush almost hidden away in a luxuriant growth of weeds. But long before she had restored order in the garden near the house, before she had even begun to explore the country outside it, there came a downpour rain. This lasted for more than a week and then came a succession of mists. With the first days of October, rain fell again heavily, and Marjorie found that it was impossible to go beyond the gates. She had made the discovery two days ugo, and on this gray, dall morning life seemed intolerable. The house was so dark, and gloomy, and, now that she know her way

It seemed to Marjorie that she could hear her friend's comic description of the bare old place and its pompous, antiquated ways—and also the laughter of her other school fellow-there had only been two other pupils at Mrs. Locker'sas Addy gave a rendering of Aunt Louisa. "No, no," the girl repeated quickly, "I could not have Addy here." She longed for companionship, yet she did not know where she was to seek it. She had been twice down to the village. Except the alchouse there was nothing within sight bigger than a cottage, and even the cottages were very small and poor. Both the two Sundays had been so wet that her Aunt had sent Marjorie word she was not to go to church, but she had already learned from Hannah that the congregation was made up only of villagers and servants from Eyon Court. The church was two miles from the village, and the parsonage was at a greater distance on the farther side of the moor. "It is too desclate," she said; "my hair will all men, ought to have known better." turn grey and I shall be an old woman all at once." "Mise Marjorie," Hannah's voice said at her

The dining-room opened on to the first staircase landing, so that Marjorio always had to pass her aunt's on the way to her own room. The ground floor of the house was given up to the kitchen and offices, and the rooms at the top of good deal about Miss Eyon. Miss Eyon was already busy at her deck. She nodded at Marjorie "You look pale, child. You shut yourself up too much. Why don't you take a walk?" "I should like it. Aunt. only Hannah said Imight lose my way in the mist."

"I want to send a note to the Parsonage." Miss Evon said, "and you can be my postman. You have only to follow the path behind the village, across the moor." The girl's eyes were bright with expectation. Her despondency fled at this prospect of change. "Am I to bring back any answer?" she said.

Mrs. Locker's house, which had been Marjorie's home since her mother's death. was near a town and in comparatively flat country; her own home had been much nearer to Eyon Court, but in greener and tamer scenery. There was something fascinating to the girl in the idea of a solitary walk across the wild moor, and as she hurried to her room she wished that she had gone out sooner, instead of listening to Haunali. "I have grown timid in this shut up house," she said. When she reached the moor behind the village, Marjorie felt more like herself. Her cheeks | tone;" it may help me to understand her." glowed and her eyes sparkled as she looked across the broad heath-covered waste. The
